Some people are considering creating a simple document that would verify if a person has been vaccinated against COVID-19. It would be just like a driver's license, and it would be entirely voluntary. It would not be required for travel, but without the document, you would need to be tested. For those who do have the document, it would greatly simplify and speed up travel between states and between countries, and you wouldn't need additional testing.

VAC2. In general, do you support or oppose this proposal?	Strongly support.....	34%

OPPOSE (NET).....	23

VAC3. And thinking about this document, even if none of them fully represents your opinion, which statement do you agree with more?	It is entirely voluntary. Every person can choose whether or not they want to apply for the vaccine document. Those that don't can still travel, but under stricter rules. Those that do apply can return to their normal travel routine.....	44%
	This is another example of government overreach. We shouldn't be collecting this kind of information on anyone. Washington already has too much control over our lives. Let's not make it worse.....	28
	It should be mandatory. Now is not the time to allow people who are reckless about the pandemic to continue to endanger others and enabling spread of the virus when they travel.....	28

VAC4. Who would you have the most faith and confidence in running this vaccine document effort?	The national public health agencies.....	51%
